

Panel abstract:

This panel will discuss developments in local history publishing over the past few decades. How can publishers make their materials more accessible, and at the same time maintain standards of both quality and accuracy? Is there an audience for local history and the historic environment outside of the traditional market? How do we ensure that this audience is reached? What does the future hold for local history publishing and is there still a market for more traditional forms of local history publication?